

The world's first inclusive recruitment interviews

Braided Interviews is a new virtual interview tool designed to make interviews fairer.

Traditional (face-to-face or video) interview formats do not align with many individuals' communication preferences, putting them at a huge disadvantage.

But with Braided Interviews everybody belongs.

Key Features

- No video, no audio: Braiding is a typed, real-time interview giving you the time and space to respond without undue pressure
- Questions are shared with you in advance and are always visible on screen

As a candidate, should you choose a Braided Interview?

You have been given an opportunity to use Braided Interviews in your upcoming recruitment interview. Braided Interviews is a new tool specifically designed to make the interview process fairer.

Because we all have different communication preferences traditional interviews don't give everyone an equal chance to excel. Braiding embraces these differences and creates an interview environment in which everybody belongs.

Forward thinking, inclusive employers are now starting to offer Braided Interviews as an option to all candidates. So please watch the video via the QR code and, if you think it will be better for you, please choose a Braided Interview.

Why we created Braided Interviews

Many candidates find the traditional interview format highly stressful.

Whether face-to-face or on video, challenges such as eye contact, small talk and social etiquette can be overwhelming. Or they may worry about saying too much or too little in response to the interviewer's questions.

It doesn't matter why, but if you feel like the person in the picture before an interview, then you won't be able to shine.

This is a serious problem. Some people avoid applying for roles entirely – even roles where they are a great fit – because they are worried about the interview process.

We created Braided Interviews to solve this, to create a level playing field where everybody has an equal opportunity.

TIP: You may know that Braiding was originally invented for use in space. It really is like nothing else on Earth so if you would like to know more before your interview, please visit <https://braided.space/resources/braided-interviews>
